REFLECTIONS OF A LIFETIME

ON TO COLLEGE

As previously mentioned, my Uncle Lester was most influential in seeing that I went to college. One day in the Spring of 1935 he insisted that my father and I accompany him to Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, some twenty-eight miles from our home. Needless to say, it was a new experience for me and a enlightening one as well. We had been to Gettysburg

Doctors Implant World's Smallest Pacemaker

Doctors at Penn State's Milton S. Eisenhower Medical Center implanted the world's smallest cardiac pacemaker for the first time in Pennsylvania after its successful release on October 31. The 8-year-old patient, who required the pacemaker following surgery to correct congenital heart disease, underwent the procedure on November 1 and was released on a work leave in good condition.

Dr. John L. Myers, associate professor of cardiovascular surgery, led a team of surgeons who implanted the Micro-Matrix pacemaker, which weighs about 17 grams (less than half an ounce) and is roughly the size of a postage stamp. The pacemaker can be specifically programmed through the skin to electrically stimulate either the atrium or the ventricle of a heart that beats too slowly.

The miniature pacemaker, manufactured by Medtronic, Inc. of Minneapolis, MN, was previously tested in clinical trials earlier this year. The battery-powered device holds special appeal for low-weight patients or others to which a small size is important. The small size reduces the chance of being in the chest, decreasing the chance of the device being seen by the patient.

"Pacemakers used to be the size of a loaf of bread," Dr. Myers said. "Because they were so big, they were uncomfortable to implant in children. This new device is a big step in pacemaker technology. By miniaturizing the components, we can more effectively provide chronic pacemaker therapy for children and babies that before was only really available for adults."

Dr. Myers was an ideal first candidate for the device. Dr. Myers said that his son, Carlos, needed the device after he underwent surgery for a congenital heart defect. Carlos was born with inverted aorta, a hole between his heart chambers, and severe valve blockage. After a successful operation, he developed three problems, he developed a heart block, a slowing of the heart beat in the ventricle. Developing heart problem after surgery for this particular type of heart defect, Dr. Myers said.

Dr. Myers implanted the pacemaker into the left anterior chest wall, under the pecoral muscle, to keep the heart just to normal. Carlos will not outgrow the small pacemaker, although it will have to be replaced in five to seven years when the battery is depleted.

Carlos, whose legal guardians are Raymond Wilbert and Julie Rowland-Wilbert of Hanover, was born in El Salvador. The Wilberts are in the process of adopting Carlos and his 12-year-old brother.
